roads, and especially a railroad or two. Mr. Jones says that there is a movement at Uniontown, Pa., to reach the R. & O. by a railroad from that point to Cranberry, and we have already alluded to the Kingwood movement for a road from the county seat to either Tunnelton, Newburg or Rowlesburg. The prospects are that out of the much agitation had on the subject a railroad or two will finally result. We trust that the enterprising spirit of the county who see the great necessity for developing their resources by better means of communication will not weary in their efforts to enlist a general popular interest in these enterprises. They may be sure that success will reward them in the end. Such is the history of almost all railroad building. It seems to require much agitation and many discouragements at the outset. But success comes at last.

"Is or Are." Two Eastern papers, the Washington Star and the New York Mail and Express, are discussing the phraseology of a recent dispatch from Secretary Frelinghuysen, of the State department, in which he took occasion to say that "the United States is at peace with all the nations of the earth." The Mail and Express objects to the employment of "is" instead of "are" by the Secretary, both on grammatical and historical grounds. It says:

It is wrong, misleading, and ungrammatical to say that the "United States is at peace," because our National Government is the result of the free consent of the States. It is right to say "We are a Nation." It is utterly inadmissible to say that the United States "is" anything whatever. The people of the "United States" formed a "Union," and adopted a National Government, which within its sphere and for its designated purpose, is as supreme as any on earth. It was to establish this fact and principle that the war for the Union was fought, and it could not have been continued a year on any other basis.

The Star is not convinced by the statements of its contemporary, and replies as follows:

The question whether the people of this country are a Nation or only the inhabitants of a number of petty sovereignties united together by a common interest, is a pretty largely into the issues of the late war. It was finally and definitely settled in favor of the first part of the proposition in 1865, and at such a cost of treasure and human life that it was supposed to be placed forever beyond the region of debate. We are surprised, therefore, to see our esteemed and patriotic contemporary undertaking to revive it at this late day.

The Star is right to the main fact of its statements. The expression "United States is at peace" represents unity and nationality—one, if you please. It is the equivalent of the Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, or of the German Empire. This is now the political significance of the expression, and it is so accepted and understood throughout the world. But still the expression is as grammatically open to objection as it would be to employ a singular verb after the word scissors, as, for instance, the scissors is dull.

Louis Napoleon's famous expression was "the Empire is peace." This is euphonious and correct, but it would not do to say that the German States is at peace, although they constitute the Empire of Germany. We must use the word nation if we want to use the singular verb, because we cannot get rid of the discordance produced in the mind by multiplicity in the noun and singularity in the verb.

TROUBANCE of families have had occasion to try the never failing qualities of Dr. Roberts' Cough Syrup, and they all unite in the praise of this wonderful prescription.
